

INTRODUCTION

Course Description:

Asian International Relations has almost come a full circle from being on the margins of global politics to being the hotbed of global geopolitics. Asia is today home to 60% of the world population and the Asian GDP is more than the rest of the world combined, with China being the world's second largest, Japan being the 3rd largest and India being the fifth largest economies in the world. China, India, Pakistan and North Korea are also nuclear powers. The emergence of the concept of the "Indo-Pacific" is testimony to this evolution. However, the structure of global governance and multilateral institutions are still not reflective of the new role of Asia. The course seeks to trace the evolution of this Asian journey from the first half of the twentieth century to the beginning of the twenty-first century. Through this process the course seeks to deconstruct the definition and understanding of "Asia". Another objective is to understand the role of colonialism, nationalism, religion and great-power rivalry in shaping the past and current dynamics of Asia. Finally, the course seeks to bring attention to the global power shift in the making and the resistance to it. The larger goal is to identify the motivating factors of international relations in Asia and to situate them in the various theoretical schools of IR. A major attraction of the course includes the onsite module, where the students benefit immensely from visiting Asia and getting a first hand experience of Asian International Relations.
