

PRESENTACIÓN

Breve descripción: Course description:

Globalization has multiple dimensions affecting the way we do business. It affects all the economic sectors and all types of firms. Every day, businesses face new opportunities and threats caused by global demand and global supply. Those direct effects come through international trade and international financial transmission channels, which have been exploding in the last few decades. Further, there are other key indirect effects by which globalization affects the strategy and the management of a business, such as the disruption of new technologies, political, legal, and social differences across countries, and environmental and cultural effects.

Managers facing with this diversity and complexity that regions and countries in the world exhibit, need to develop new strategies and managerial skills that include the international toolbox. In this course, students will acquire and apply the knowledge and competencies to successfully address global issues, based on exercises and case studies to simulate real life organizations.
